Tax

The introduction of Goods and Services Tax (GST) is characterised by a marked shift from the present origin-based taxation to that of consumption-based taxation.

GST has subsumed majority of the indirect taxes levied by Central and State governments such as Central Excise Duty, Service tax, State Value Added Tax, Central Sales Tax, Entry tax, Purchase tax, etc. and has been the biggest and most significant tax reform in the fiscal history of India since Independence. GST has a business-wide impact on the entire value chain of operations like procurement, manufacturing, sales and pricing, finance, information technology, supply chain, warehousing and so on, therefore it becomes critical for businesses to plan and evaluate the impact of GST on any transaction in a timely manner to comply with law

With high volumes of transactions being handled by different functions throughout the business, the potential for error on complex returns is significant - and the penalties can be substantial. The more time a company's in-house tax professionals spend on compliance, the less time they can devote to higher-value activities such as strategic tax planning and risk management.

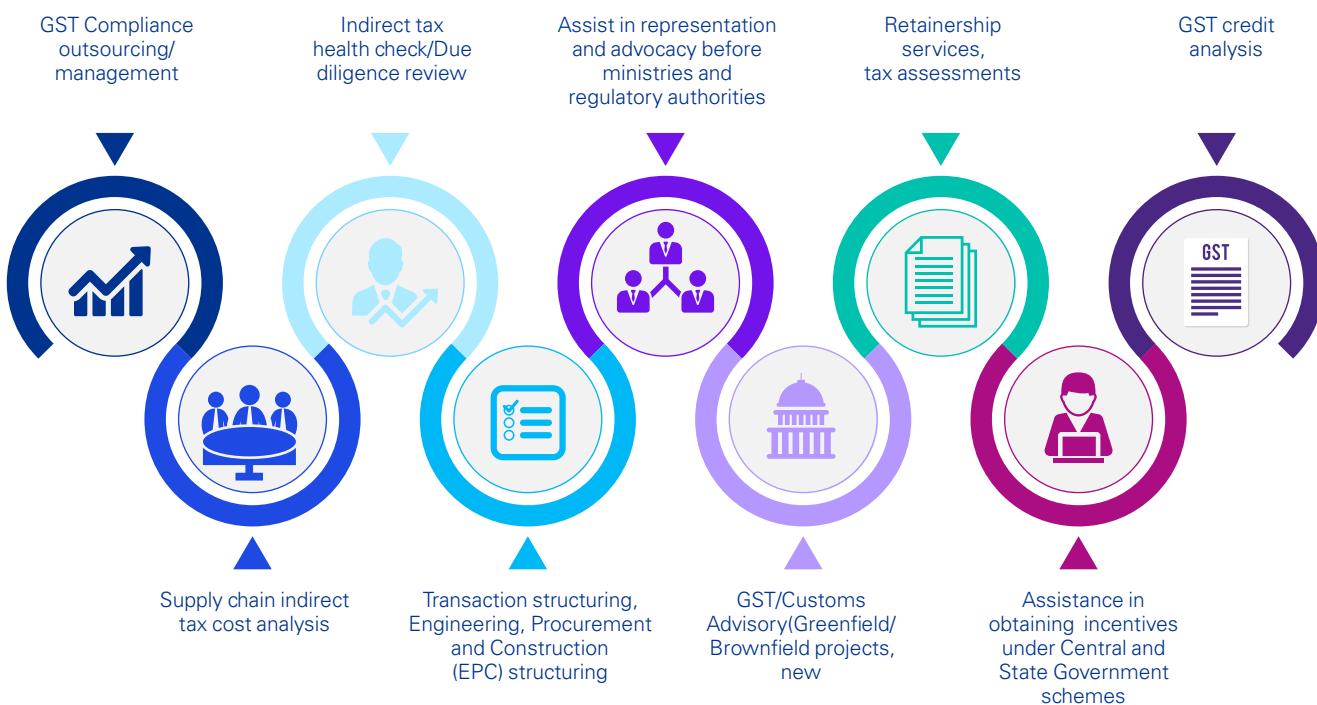

Companies, therefore, need to align their tax function with various business functions to ensure tax efficient decisions. An equilibrium between the litigation risk and transaction cost also needs to be maintained.

Also, in recent times, with a view to make India self-reliant both Central and State Governments have come up with various policy initiatives that could help businesses recoup their investment cost in the form of
