

TaxNewsFlash

United States

No. 2023-234
July 6, 2023

U.S. Tax Court: Section 41 research tax credit denied, accuracy-related penalties imposed

The U.S. Tax Court today released a memorandum opinion holding that taxpayers were not entitled to a section 41 research tax credit and were liable for section 6662(a) penalties.

The case is: Betz v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo 2023-84 (July 6, 2023). Read the Tax Court's opinion [PDF 988 KB] (114 pages)

Summary

The taxpayers were shareholders in an S corporation engaged in the business of designing and supplying air pollution control systems that eliminate harmful airborne manufacturing byproducts. The S corporation had extensive institutional knowledge and experience in supplying systems that met the specifications of customers in manufacturing industries.

On its 2014 information return, the S corporation claimed a $501,531 research tax credit under section 41 in connection with 19 projects, based both on the costs of producing the systems it supplied and the wages it paid to certain of its employees for activities performed in connection with the projects. The S corporation did not use a time-tracking system for its employees' activities and thus estimated the amounts of employee time spent performing qualified services.

On their personal federal income tax returns for 2014, the taxpayers claimed a flowthrough of the credit and later carried forward the remaining portion of the credit to their 2015 and 2016 returns.

Following a lengthy trial, the Tax Court found that for all 19 projects, the taxpayers failed to carry their burden of establishing that the products were pilot models. Accordingly, the S corporation's purported "qualified research expenditures" (QREs) for costs of production failed to satisfy section 41(d)(1)(A) and were not creditable.

The Tax Court further found that for all 19 projects, the taxpayers failed to carry their burden of establishing that the wages of certain of the S corporation's employees were incurred in connection with the performance of "qualified services" and thus the S corporation's purported QREs for wages were not creditable.

The Tax Court also found that for five of the projects, the S corporation did not retain substantial rights in the results of its research under its applicable contracts with its customers. Accordingly, the S corporation's purported QREs for those five projects were incurred in connection with "funded research" within the meaning of section 41(d)(4)(H) and were not creditable.

Finally, the Court held that the taxpayers were liable for accuracy-related penalties under section 6662(a) for tax years 2014, 2015, and 2016.

kpmg.com/socialmedia

The information contained in TaxNewsFlash is not intended to be "written advice concerning one or more Federal tax matters" subject to the requirements of section 1037(a)(2) of Treasury Department Circular 230, as the content of this document is issued for general informational purposes only, is intended to enhance the reader's knowledge on the matters addressed therein, and is not intended to address the circumstances of any particular individual or entity. Although we endeavor to provide accurate and timely information, there can be no guarantee that such information is accurate as of the date it is received or that it will continue to be accurate in the future. No one should act on such information without appropriate professional advice after a thorough examination of the particular situation.

The KPMG name and logo are trademarks used under license by the independent member firms of the KPMG global organization.

KPMG International Limited is a private English company limited by guarantee and does not provide services to clients. No member firm has any authority to obligate or bind KPMG International or any other member firm vis-à-vis third parties, nor does KPMG International have any such authority to obligate or bind any member firm.

Direct comments, including requests for subscriptions, to Washington National Tax. For more information, contact KPMG's Federal Tax Legislative and Regulatory Services Group at +1 202.533.3712, 1801 K Street NW, Washington, DC 20006-1301.

To unsubscribe from TaxNewsFlash-United States, reply to Washington National Tax.

Privacy | Legal